First Digital and Historical-critical Edition of the Paris Manuscripts

The “Center for the History of Women Philosophers and Scientists” (HWPS) at the University of Paderborn began its work on the first historical-critical edition of the Paris manuscripts of the main philosophical work of the philosopher, mathematician and physicist Émilie Du Châtelet at the beginning of January 2021. With the edition of the revision stages of the Institutions de physique as they are revealed in the manuscripts, the printed version of which first appeared in 1740, a direct connection is made to the Center’s edition of Du Châtelet’s early writings, the so-called Saint Petersburg Manuscripts, which are available online on the HWPS-website. The edition project, initially limited to 2 years, is funded by the German Research Foundation, led by Prof. Dr. Ruth Hagenruber, Director of the Center, and organized by Dr. Hanns-Peter Neumann. Neumann made his debut at the Center on January 4, 2021 and will be largely responsible for the editorial work on the Paris manuscripts. Like the Saint Petersburg Manuscripts, this new milestone in the recent publication history of Du Châtelet’s works will be presented in a reader-friendly online edition. Videos: Celebrating Émilie Du Châtelet's Birthday

On December 17, 2020, the Center for the History of Women Philosophers and Scientists and its Director, Ruth E. Hagenruber, invited Project Vox to celebrate Émilie du Châtelet’s 314th Birthday with the first ever online celebration.

Andrew Janiak (Duke University and Director of Project Vox) presented his talk on the Originality of Du Châtelet's Philosophy at the Center for the History of Women Philosophers and Scientists. Have a look at the recording here.

Videos: EchoTechGender Visions

An important part of the IAPh conference 2021 is the gathering and collection of various visions from people of different origins, convictions and backgrounds. To change the world and the values of philosophy, we need the voices and words of various committed people. Our mission is to present those visions, which includes rethinking the past to define the future.

We have combined these visions in an innovative format under the name EcoTechGender Visions. The Visions are a new format that is part of the EcoTechGender project, which was founded in 2006 by Ruth E. Hagengruber.
